ARGUMENT IN LIKINS CASE FOR AUDIT OF BYRNE'S ACCOUNTS.

Attorney E. C. Higbee Forcibly Presented Chairman Byrne's Side Before Judge Umbel This Morning.

LAW IS UNCONSTITUTIONAL

He Says and Quotes Pennsylvania Supreme Court and Other Authorities
Says Legislature Had No Legal Right to Pass Corrupt Practices Act
As It Now Stands

UNIONTOWN, Feb. 10.—Arguments were begun this morning before Judge R. E. Umbel on the petition of William L. Likins to audit the accounts of John R. Byrne in which the petitioners asked that the accounts of the candidates and the accounts of Byrne covering the fall election be opened. Very few people were present during the arguments. Mr. Higbee opened for the respondents and took up the entire morning in presenting his side of the case.

"The case comes before the court on a motion to dismiss and quash on the ground that the sections of the Act which provide for the auditing of the accounts is unconstitutional. It is also so framed that the provisions of the Act, requiring the candidate to file his account is unconstitutional.

The reasons assigned in support of this contention are that the provision of the Act calling for the auditing of the accounts is unconstitutional, which passed the act did not designate the subject of legislation either the auditing of the accounts of political managers or managers of the filing of accounts by candidates, and that the title of the Act is not broad enough to include legislation providing for the auditing of accounts.

The attorneys for the respondent cited the 25th section of Article II of the Constitution, which prohibits the General Assembly, convened in special session from legislating on any subject not designated by the Governor in his proclamation. Attention was directed to the limited scope of the subject designated by the Governor which mentions the auditing of accounts to which money may be applied by political managers and candidates, and to provide for the filing of accounts by political managers and committees.

It was argued that the limitation of the Proclamation Accounts to be filed by political managers and committees, cannot include the auditing of accounts by the Committee of Quarter Sessions, the issuing of a writ of quo warranto by the Attorney General the ousting of a man from office without an election contest thereby practical by abolishing the laws concerning contested elections, and the compelling of a man to give incriminating testimony against himself. The greater Pittsburgh case is cited as authority in support of this contention.

It was further argued that the letter of the Act cannot be construed as including the provisions of the Act is enumerated. Numerous decisions of the Supreme Court are cited in support of these contentions, and much stress was laid upon the case of Commonwealth vs. Rabe when Judge Umbel in a lengthy opinion upheld a similar contention of Attorney Higbee on what is claimed to be an exactly parallel case.

The most interesting part of the argument was that argued against the Twelfth Section of the Act which provides that a witness should not be excused from answering any question on the ground that it would incriminate him.

This was claimed to be an invasion of one of the primary vested and inherited rights of man guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and protected from abridgement by the States by the Fourteenth Amendment.

In support of this contention on Constitutional principle was followed in quick succession by another affidavit by what the attorneys claimed the fundamental principles of Constitutional law and decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States for the purpose of showing that the sections of the Act in question does in fact abridge the rights of citizens of the United States. Attorney Stevens will argue the case today.

STICK TO ENGINE.

School Directors Visit South Side
School and Look into Heating Proposition

The Board of School Directors visited the South Side school Saturday afternoon to make a personal investigation into the heating proposition there. The board had a proposition from the West Penn Electric Company to install a motor instead of the engine there and representatives of the electric company accompanied them as well as a representative of the furnace.

The cost of the water used to cool the jacket around the cylinder of the engine has been a great expense and a proposition to install a motor to drive the fan which circulates the hot air through the building was read.

The directors, however, will not likely to agree with the engine. They do not consider it a safe and business proposition. The cost of the motor would be about $1,200 and in its removal there would be allowed about $225. The difference in the cost of operating the fan by electricity instead of with the engine was too slight to affect the engine.

A report on the subject will be made at the next meeting of the School Board.

COASTING ACCIDENT IS FATAL FOR ONE.

Cornelius Bureford, Colored
Boy, Loses Life at Mt.
Pleasant.

FIVE COMPANIONS ARE INJURED

Boy's Liver Was Punctured and He Died at the Memorial Hospital
Where Some of the Other Injured
Were Also Taken.

Special to The Courier
MT PLEASANT Feb 10.—Although a ban has been put on sled riding in the borough by Burgess Crosby on account of the icy streets making it a dangerous pastime, still a great number of the enthusiasts could not resist the temptation offered them by the snow covered hills on the outside of the borough limits Saturday and as a result a negro boy was killed while six others of his race who composed one of the sled loads were seriously hurt.

The coasters with many others gathered on the pike just west of town on Saturday evening to take advantage of the good sleighing offered them on the steep hill. Cornelius Bureford in charge of a big sled his sister, Katherine, Roy Kinney, and sister Nettie, Clarence Rideout, Nema Hall and Charles Gov started down the incline. When about half way down Cornelius lost control of the big sled and the sled with its occupants dashed over the steep bank. The sled passing over Cornelius body puncturing his liver, while his sister was thrown to the ground receiving internal injuries and Miss Hall was thrown against a pole receiving a fractured thigh, all the other occupants came out of the mishap with sprained ankles or badly bruised bodies.

The ambulance was quickly called and Cornelius Bureford, his sister Katherine and Nema Hall were removed to the Memorial Hospital. Cornelius died from his injuries early Sunday morning. The other members of the party were taken to their homes in sleighs their injuries not being considered serious.

SCOTSDALE SCRAPS

Picked Up Around the Coke Region's Mill Town.

SCOTSDALE Feb 10.—There was a fairly good sized audience of men in the United Brethren church yesterday afternoon for the mass meeting around the auspices of the Y M C A. Rev J B Kenfrew of Greensburg who had been secured as the speaker was unable to be present on account of the funeral of a parishioner. Rev W H Cressel, pastor of the Church of God at Alverton was secured at the last moment. Rev Cressel spoke on "The Spirit of Phylisism," taking his text from the story of the Pharisae and the Publican praying in the temple. He gave a most interesting and forceful address. The music was led by an orchestra under the direction of Prof W T Buehler.

The remains of Mrs. Catherine Long of Bridgeport were taken to Hopwood Fayette county on Saturday afternoon for interment. She was 76 years of age and is survived by a family of grown children.

Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Sneed were at Clanton yesterday all night, the result of C B Reed, brother of Mrs. Sneed. The interment took place today at Tippecanoe Fayette county. Mr Reed was 17 years of age and is survived by his wife and two small children. He had been ailing from consumption for a number of years and had but recently returned from Colorado. The family resided in this place for several years.

M. A. McCombs was at Newcomet Fayette county on Sunday visiting his son, Dr. Edgar McCombs.

Misses Laura and Grace Mumaw spent Saturday in Pittsburg.

A novel and interesting service was held in the First church last night being a rally in the interest of the Italian mission that has just been organized under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Society of the church. There were over 100 Italians present. The first speaker was Rev. Ettore Schlan who has been conducting a mission for Italians in Thinf town for several months. He has been secured to do some work in connection with the mission here and announced his plans to his countrymen present, also inviting the cooperation of the people.

The principal speaker was Rev. Antonio Mangano of New York. He first addressed the Italians in their language and then spoke to the Americans. He spoke on the subject of immigration. He brought out the important facts that come from all nations were in this country and that it would be necessary to examine them if the nation is to be preserved. He said that the nation is the custom and superstitions of the home land many of which are at variance with the customs and laws of this country. These people must be educated and christianized to make them take up the customs of the country of their adoption. He also denoted the opinion that is quite prevalent that all foreigners are scums of the earth claiming that a majority are respectable educated people so far as the standard of this country goes. The of the American people is to take them up to the highest American standard. The speaker announced that his countrymen were anxious and willing to receive such teaching and mission everywhere where meeting with great success.

The meeting gave quite an impetus to the mission that is being planned for Scotland. The expenses of conducting the same have been provided for three months and the mission is hoped to continue for a year.

HURT COASTING.

One Dunbar Laid Has Leg Broken and Another Butts Into Stone Wall.

SCOTSDALE Feb 10.—Two serious coasting accidents happened here on Saturday. Daniel Smith, aged 72 had a leg broken and Joseph Smith, an older small boy, lost control of his sled which dashed into a stone wall cutting in ugly gash in his head. Smith, with a number of other boys, was sled riding in a field. To make the ride longer the boards were taken from a fence to let the sleds slide. As he went down the hill Smith's sled swayed out of his better control and on the fence which the sleds were still on the leg was broken and he was otherwise badly hurt.

Young Patrick attempted to round some men coming up Gighill hill on Connellsville street and ran into a stone wall. His head was hit but above the right eye. Severe stitches were required.

TIPPLE BURNED.

Fire Destroys 700 Foot Long Structure of the Mt Pleasant Coke Company.

Fire which started about 8 o'clock Sunday morning and which was still burning late Sunday evening, destroyed the large tipples and most of the buildings of coal in the Mt Pleasant coke mines of the Mt Pleasant coke company at Tipple. The tipple, a tall structure of iron, which was of wooden construction was burning fiercely.

It was about 700 feet long and by night the most of it was consumed, the fire having eaten its way almost to the mouth of the mine. Measures are being taken to prevent its entrance to the mine opening. An interesting feature in connection with the fire is the fact that the Strickland works of the Mt Pleasant company had been closed down for about two weeks previous and were about to start work next week.

FIVE SATURDAYS.

Will Come in This the Shortest Month of the Year.

To those who receive pay each Saturday the present month will be of unusual significance, in that there are five Saturdays in the month and the short 28th day in the month with its Saturday is a rarity. You see it can happen only in a leap year and only in the sixth leap year at that for the first must be the first Saturday and the twenty-ninth the last Saturday. We won't have another February with five Saturdays in 1911 or 1916 or 28 years hence.

You might think this same thing would follow looking backward and certainly it would but we missed it. Last year in 1907 you know and that brings the February coming on a Saturday just four leap years sooner. It has therefore been twelve years since we had five Saturdays in February.

Della Vernon does an act that is unique and Kelly Hagan, comedienne and vocalist is a winner. The pictures this week will also be an important part of the bill.

Still, alternately stupefied by his own grief and maddened into the necessity for action, he packed a suit case, crawled out of the rear door, toiled across country and found a farmer to drive him twenty miles over a sandy road to a local railroad crossing, where he managed to board a train for Albany.

At Albany as he stood panting and sweating on the long concrete platform which paralleled track No. 1 he saw a private car, switched from a Boston and Albany train, shunted to the rear of the Merchants' express. The private car was lettered in gold on the central panel, "Algonquin." He boarded the Pullman coupled to it forward, pushed through the vestibule, "loved" aside the Japanese steward and ducky cook, forcing his way straight into the private car. Quarters, reaching a magazine, looked up in astonishment. For a full moment neither spoke. Then Mortimer dropped his suit case, sat down in an armchair opposite Quarters and leisurely sipped his smoking face and neck.

"Scotch and lithia?" he said hoarsely. The Japanese steward looked at Quarters, then, that gentleman's at most unimpeachable word, went away to execute the commission.

He executed a great many similar commissions during the trip to New York. When they arrived there at 5 o'clock Quarters offered Mortimer his hand and told the trembling, guilty fingers as he laid down a country that could precision and emotionless emphasis something that appeared to require the full concentration of Mortimer's half drugged faculties.

And when at length Mortimer drove away in a hansom Quarters's Japanese steward went with him—perhaps to carry his suit case—a country that could precision and emotionless emphasis something that appeared to require the full concentration of Mortimer's half drugged faculties.

It had taken a few minutes to perceive that something had occurred to change a point of view which he had believed it impossible for Quarters to change. Something had gone wrong in his own careful calculations—some cog had slipped, some rivet given way, some lead plate cracked, and Harrington evidently had not been aware of it, but Quarters knew it. There was something wrong.

It was too late now to go tuckering in the dark for trouble. Plank understood that. Coolly, as though utterly unaware that anything was amiss, he stood the strain, he started it full speed. And when he stooped it at last Harrington's grip had been ground to atoms and Quarters had looked on without comment. There seemed to be little more for them to do except to pay the miller.

"Tomorrow," said Quarters, rising to go. It was on the edge of Plank's lips to say "Today," but he was silent, knowing that Harrington would speak for him. And the old man did, without words, treading his iron visage on Quarters with the silent dignity of a deity. But Quarters could not demand a day before they reckoned with Plank. And Plank, profoundly disturbed, struggled his massive shoulders in contemptuous assent.

So Quarters and Harrington went away, the younger partner taking leave of the older, the latter for an outdoor prep which he man could over again have use for. Old and beauteous, that was all Harrington now stood for in Quarters's eyes. The best of his victims might now finish him with a club where he swung in his loosened saddle, or leave him to that horseshoe on the pole where watching him yonder on the horizon.

For now, whether Harrington lived or died, he must be counted as nothing in this new struggle darkly outlining his initial strategy in Quarters's brain. What was coming was coming between himself and Plank alone. The result must be attained swiftly, with secrecy and with the aid of no man. For he did not count Mortimer a man.

At the door of Major Belvedere's house Sylvia's maid received Quarters smilingly, saying that her mistress was not at home, but that Mrs. Mortimer was—which suited Quarters for necessity of asking for a private conference with Lella, which was exactly what he had come for. But her first unguarded words on receiving him as he rose at her entrance into the darkened drawing room changed that plan, for she changed it all so much, and so much for the better that he almost smiled to think of the crudity of human combat, nations and inventions as compared to the masterly machinations of fate.

Lella said, laughing: "Oh, you are too late, Howard. We are dining with Mr. Plank at Riverside here. What in the world are you doing in town so suddenly?"

"A business telegram. I might have come down with you and Sylvia if I had known. Is Plank dining with you alone?"

"I haven't seen him, smiled Lella, gravely. He will tell us his plans of course when he comes."

"Oh!" said Quarters, dropping his eyes and glancing furtively toward the curtained windows. At the instant a hansom drove up. Sylvia sprang out, ran lightly up the low steps, and the silent shrouded house rang with the clamor of the bell.

Lella looked curiously at Quarters, who sat motionless, head partly averted, as though listening to something heard by him alone. He believed perhaps that he was listening to the voice of fate again, and it may have been so, for already for the third time all his plans were changing to suit this new ally of his—his mysterious fate which was shaping matters for him as he waited. Sylvia had started upstairs like a frenzied whirlwind, but her flying foot halted at Lella's constrained voice from the drawing room, and she spun around and came into the darkened room like an April breeze.

"Lella! They'll be here at a quarter to 7!"

Her breath seemed to leave her body as a shadowy figure rose in the uncertain light and confronted her.

"You?"

He said, "Didn't you recognize the car outside?"

She had not even seen it, so excited, so deeply engaged had she been with the riotous tumult of her own thoughts.

And still her heart, unbelieving gaze widened to dismay as she gazed there, hated on the threshold, and still his eyes, narrowing, held her under their expressionless inspection.

"When did you come? Why?" she asked in an altered voice.

"I came on business. Naturally, being here, I want to see you. I understand you are dining out."

"Yes, we are dining out."

"I'm sorry I didn't wire you, because we might have dined together. I saw Plank this afternoon. He did not say you were to dine with him. Shall I see you later in the evening, Sylvia?"

"It will be too late."

"Oh, tomorrow then! What train do you take?"

Sylvia did not answer. He picked up his hat, repeating the question carelessly, and still she made no reply.

"Shall I see you tomorrow?" he asked, swinging on her rather suddenly.

"Think not. I—there will be no time."

He bowed quietly to Lella, offering his hand. "Who did you say was to dine with you—besides Plank?"

Lella stood silent, then, withdrawing her fingers, walked to the window.

Quarters, his hat in his gloved hands, looked from one to the other, his inquiring eyes returning and focused on Sylvia.

"Who are you dining with?" he asked with authority.

"Mr. Plank and Mr. Seward."

"Mr. Seward," he repeated in surprised displeasure, though he had not already divined it.

"Yes—a man I like."

"A man I dislike," he rejoined with the slightest emphasis.

"I am sorry," she said simply.

"So am I, Sylvia. And I am going to ask you to make him an excuse. Any excuse will do."

"Excuse? What do you mean, Howard?"

"I mean that I do not care to have you seen with Mr. Seward. Have I ever demanded very much of you, Sylvia? Very well, I demand this of you now."

And still she stood there, her eyes wide, her color gone, repeating: "Excuse? What excuse? What do you mean by 'excuse,' Howard?"

"I have said you know my wishes. If he had a telephone you could communicate with him."

"And say that I—that you forbid me?"

"If you choose. Yes, say that I object to him. In these things extraneous things are a matter of indifference. I want you dining in the country at a common inn with a notorious outbreak from every decent club and circle in New York?"

"What?" she whispered, white as death. "What did you say?"

"Shall I not say that everybody expects you to be a widow at 47? Do you care to have me explain to you exactly why decent people have ostracized this man with whom you are proposing to figure in a public resort?"

He turned to Lella, who stood at the window, her back turned toward them.

"Mr. Mortimer, when Mr. Plank arrives you will be kind enough to explain why Sylvia is unable to accompany you."

If Lella heard she neither turned nor made sign of comprehension.

"We will dine at the Santa Rogina," he said to Sylvia. "Agatha is there, and I'll find somebody at the club to."

"Why bother to find anybody?" said Lella, wheeling on him, exasperated.

"Why not dine there with Agatha alone? It will not be the first time, I fancy?"

"What do you mean?" he said fiercely under his breath. The color had left his face, and in his eyes Lella saw for the first time an expression that she had never before surprised in any eyes except her husband's.

"What do I mean?" repeated Lella. "I mean what I say, and if you don't understand it you can find the key to it, I fancy. Now shall I answer to you for my guests, I invite whom I choose. Mr. Seward is one, Mr. Plank is another. Sylvia, if you care to come I shall be delighted."

"I do care to come," said Sylvia. "I have been waiting for you, but you have been waiting for me."

"I will answer you now, Howard. I am going with Mrs. Mortimer. What have you to say?"

"I'll say it tomorrow," he replied, contemplating her in a dull, impassive manner as though absorbed in other things.

"Say what there is to be said now," she insisted the hot color staining her cheeks again. "Do you desire me to free you? Is that all? I will if you wish."

"No. And I shall not free you, Sylvia."

via. "This—all can be adjusted in time."

"As you please," she said slowly.

"In time," he repeated. His positionless voice now under perfect control, he turned and looked at Lella. All the wickedness of his anger was concentrated in his gaze. Then he took his leave of them as formally, as precisely as though he had forgotten the whole scene, and a minute later the big motor car ran out into a half circle, backed, wheeled and rolled away through the thickening dusk, the glare of the acetylenes sweeping the deserted street.

Into the twilight sped Quarters, head bent, but his soft, dark, lashed eyes of a woman fixed steadily ahead. Every corner, every thought and now bent to this new phase of the same question which he and fate were finding simpler to solve every minute. Of all the luxuries he permitted himself open or fervently, one—the worst of them all—his self, he had perfectly eliminated from the list the luxury of punishing where no end was served save that of mere personal satisfaction. The temptation of this luxury now presented itself, and the means of gratification were so simple, so secret, so easy to come and that the temptation became that of a duty. Seward had not in a net out of his way to future. Seward had been in the way, that was all, and his ruin was to have been merely an agreeable coincidence with the proposed ruin of Agatha's life before her ruin could be checked. Plank, if Mortimer did not drop dead before midnight, there would be a new phase. Mrs. Mortimer, whom he had expected to find a woman of necessary severity, had suddenly turned vicious. And he now hated her as coldly as he hated Major Belvedere for betraying insinuations of a sinister nature. As for Plank, fear and hatred of him was becoming his chief contempt. He had the means of checking Plank, if Mortimer did not drop dead before midnight. There would be a new phase. Scottdale Legislator Takes Up Anderson Run Sewer System Plan

WITH STATE DEPARTMENT

Commissioner Dixon Thanks Him for Calling Status of Scottdale Situation to His Special Attention and Promises Early Action—Many Want Employment.

Special to The Courier.—SCOTTDALE, Feb. 10.—John Berkey H. Boyd, a local member of the House of Representatives, has taken up the effort of the Town Council of his home town to give the unemployed work in building a part of the Anderson Run sewer system. This work has been held up on account of the delay being experienced by Council in securing the necessary sewer extension permit from the State Department of Health. Representative Boyd wrote to Dr. Samuel G. Dixon, State Commissioner of Health, the following letter, which has been bearing good fruit. Mr. Boyd says: "In the interest of the people of this community, I would emphasize the urgency of an early investigation of this sewer extension permit for permission to extend the sewer system, filed some time ago with your department. There are a great many of our people in extreme need of employment, as our industries are closed down, with an uncertain prospect of starting up. The Borough Council is endeavoring to live the situation somewhat by increasing our people with work on the sewer system, and are anxiously awaiting the Department's perusal of the plan to go ahead."

Mr. Boyd received the following encouraging message from Commissioner Dixon on Saturday evening: "The letter says: 'I will have the Scottdale matter taken up and acted upon as early a date as possible and best to thank you for calling the status of the situation in Scottdale to my special attention.'"

There have already been a large number of inquiries at the borough building as to when the work will be started upon, and it is certain that there will be plenty of men who will desire a place. Borough Engineer James B. Hoag of Conneltsville has been busy for several days collecting quotations upon sewer pipes, tools and materials. It is the expectation to begin with the smaller branches of the sewer system in the Pine Tree section. The estimates for that section comprise 3,178 feet of 24 inch sewer, 616 feet of 18 inch sewer, both to be of double strength; 192 feet of 12 inch sewer, 4,075 of 12 inch sewer, 1,560 feet of 10 inch and 1,260 feet of 8 inch sewer.

MILL RUN PUZZLED

Over the Legal Term Administrator D. B. N. C. T. A.

An anxious inquiry from Mill Run concerns the meaning of the legal term, "administrator d. b. n. c. t. a." Debate on the question raged furiously Saturday afternoon and The Courier is requested to settle the matter. The term is a Latin one and in fact it, "administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo," meaning in English an administrator of the goods not administered on) with the will annexed.

The testator of a will usually appoints an executor. If none is appointed, or the one appointed does not serve, the court appoints one, who is then called an administrator cum testamento annexo, or in English, an administrator with the will annexed.

Having once accepted the trust, an executor cannot resign without the permission of the court which granted him his letters testamentary. If such executor dies, or is removed, an executor or successor acts for him and in regard to the original estate, is called an executor de bonis non.

CHASING RAINBOWS.

Lives and Fortunes Wasted in Seeking the Unattainable.

There are men who have spent their entire lives and fortunes in trying to manufacture diamonds, or to make gold from chemicals, or to construct a machine that would run perpetually and furnish free power. They have not been successful. The successful man doesn't "chase rainbows." He chases dollars and when he rounds up a few, he puts them in a strong bank where they will be safe and earn other dollars—in the First National Bank of Conneltsville, for instance, where safety is assured and 4 per cent interest allowed.

Swamped Mt. Pleasant.
Connellsville High School defeated Mt. Pleasant High School basketball team Saturday by a score of 56 to 25. The home team played very fast and the visitors were handicapped by the floor. Asher, Eby and Moran made the greater part of the baskets.
